PREFACE.

ABOUT four years ago a movement was inaugurated looking to the publication at some time in the not distant future of a more complete history of the Schwenkfelders than has yet appeared, and a committee charged with the collection of material for such work was appointed at the Annual Conference of the Society in October, 1875. The labors of that committee naturally turned the attention of their constituents to the subject of genealogy, and excited a very general desire for the compilation from the many existing manuscripts of a complete genealogy of the descendants of the immigrant Schwenkfelders. By common consent the superintendence of such compilation was devolved upon the undersigned, who engaged the services of Rev. Reuben Kriebel to collect and transcribe the several records in a form suitable for printing. The present volume is the result of their labors.

The Rev. Balthasar Heebner, who died at an advanced age in 1848, had prepared and kept a record of marriages, births, and deaths of those who belonged to the Society of Schwenkfelders (of which he was a minister) to within a few years of his death. This record was the most complete one extant, yet in many instances omissions occurred, which had to be supplied, partially from other manuscripts, and from other records, kept in family Bibles, etc. As Mr. Heebner kept no record of those who did not adhere to the Society, other means had to be resorted to for the necessary information. This involved considerable labor, and the compiler opened a correspondence with all from whom he could obtain any knowledge.

This correspondence extended nearly into every State of the Union. In most cases he was quite successful, yet in a few he failed to get the desired information for his purpose. This

About four years ago a movement was inaugurated looking to the publication at some time in the not distant future of a more complete history of the Schweitzelers than has yet appeared, and a committee charged with the collection of material for such work was appointed at the Annual Conference of the Society in October, 1872. The labors of that committee naturally turned the attention of their constituents to the subject of genealogy, and excited a very general desire for the compilation from the many existing manuscripts of a complete genealogy of the descendants of the immigrant Schweitzelers. By common consent the superintendence of such compilation was devolved upon the undersigned, who engaged the services of Rev. Rouben Kinsler to collect and transcribe the several records in a form suitable for printing. The present volume is the result of their labors. The Rev. Baltasar Hochner, who died at an advanced age in 1846, had prepared and kept a record of marriages, births, and deaths of those who belonged to the Society of Schweitzelers (of which he was a minister) to within a few years of his death. This record was the most complete one extant, yet in many instances omissions occurred, which had to be supplied, partially from other manuscripts, and from other records kept in family Bibles, etc. As Mr. Hochner kept no record of those who did not adhere to the Society, other means had to be resorted to for the necessary information. This involved considerable labor, and the compiler opened a correspondence with all from whom he could obtain any knowledge. This correspondence extended nearly into every State of the Union. In most cases he was quite successful, yet in a few he failed to get the desired information for his purpose. This was owing to the utter indifference of some few to give their family records, and several families could not be found; yet in the whole he flatters himself that his efforts have been very successful, and must be very gratifying to the numerous descendants of those early pioneers who braved the toils and vicissitudes of the earlier settlers' life.

The record from 1846 has been supplied by the personal visits of the compiler to the descendants living in the region of country where their forefathers originally settled, and he obtained his information from authentic sources. The lists of male and female emigrants are from the original papers on file in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth at Harrisburg. An appendix explaining in some cases the relationship of the early immigrants, etc., is added at the end of the Record, to which the reader's attention is directed.

The historical sketch prepared by C. Heydrick, Esq., of Franklin, Pa., gives a faithful account of Caspar Schwenkfeld and his followers, and forms a very important part of the work. It is not, however, intended to take the place of the more elaborate work originally contemplated, the preparation of which, it is hoped, will, in some measure, be aided by our labors.

Those interested in getting up this work, indulge the hope that no one of the descendants will be so critical as to charge them with any dereliction of duty in not making it quite free from errors, for they issue it from the press with some diffidence, and hope that the errors may not be many.

The first of these is the fact that the population of the country has increased very rapidly since the year 1850. This increase has been the result of a number of causes, the most important of which are the following:

1. The increase in the number of immigrants from foreign countries.
 2. The increase in the number of children born in the country.
 3. The decrease in the number of deaths in the country.
 4. The increase in the number of people who have remained in the country since they first came here.

The second of these is the fact that the population of the country has become more and more diversified. This diversification has been the result of a number of causes, the most important of which are the following:

1. The increase in the number of immigrants from foreign countries.
 2. The increase in the number of children born in the country.
 3. The decrease in the number of deaths in the country.

The third of these is the fact that the population of the country has become more and more educated. This education has been the result of a

 of which are the following:

THE SCHWENKFELDERS.

AN HISTORICAL SKETCH.

BY C. HEYDRICK.

THE Schwenkfelders were so called from Caspar Schwenkfeld, a Silesian nobleman. He was born at Ossing (now Ossig), in Lübner circle, in the Principality of Liegnitz, in Lower Silesia, in 1490, was educated at Cologne, and dwelt several years at other universities, where theology early attracted his attention, and the writings of the Church Fathers became his favorite study. Quitting university life he visited many German courts, and devoted some years to the culture which, in his time, was supposed to befit his rank, qualifying himself for knighthood, and becoming, as he says in one of his epistles, a courtier. While yet a young man he entered the service of Carl, Duke of Münsterberg, a grandson of Podiebrad, the Hussite King of Bohemia, at whose court the doctrines of John Huss were received, and by none more heartily than by the young knight and courtier. They made a deep and lasting impression upon his mind, and doubtless gave direction to his future life and labors. Bodily infirmities soon unfitted him for knightly duties, and he quitted the service of the Duke of Münsterberg and became Counsellor to Frederick II., Duke of Liegnitz, whom he served in that capacity a number of years. Theology, however, had stronger attractions for him than affairs of state.

He made the acquaintance of many theologians who were drifting in the direction of the Reformation, among whom were Valentine Crautwald, Johann Sigismund Werner, and Fabian Eckel, and under the influence of such associations the impressions received at Münsterberg deepened until, as he expressed it, God touched his heart, and he withdrew from the ducal court and was chosen Canon of St. John's Church in Liegnitz. Luther had now withdrawn from the Church of Rome, and his preaching attracted Schwenkfeld's attention and inspired him with a more intense zeal for the service of the Divine Master. He was at one with Luther upon the issues which the latter had raised with the Roman Catholic Church, and could no longer hold his position in St. John's Church without violence to his conscience. He therefore renounced it to become an evangelist, and, for thirty-six years, with voice and pen, exhort men to repentance and godliness.

Although not by nature a controversialist, as his writings abundantly testify, Schwenkfeld soon came to differ with the great Reformer on several points, chief among which related to the Eucharist, to the efficacy of the Divine Word, to the human nature of Christ, and to baptism. Schwenkfeld rejected the doctrine of impanation or consubstantiation as well as that of transubstantiation, and held that Christ taught (Matt. xxvi. 26) that "such as this broken bread is to the body, so is my body to the soul, a true and real food, which nourishes, sanctifies, and delights the soul; and such as this wine is to the body, so, in its effects, is my blood to the soul, which it strengthens and refreshes;" and, as a corollary, that the impenitent, though he would eat of the bread of the Lord, could not eat the body of the Lord, but that the penitent believer did partake of both, not only at the sacramental altar, but elsewhere.

In respect to the second point of difference, he denied that the external word, which is committed to writing in the Scriptures, was endowed with the power of healing, illuminating, and renewing the mind, but ascribed this power to the Internal or Eternal Word, i.e., Christ himself. (John i. 1-14; Rev. xix. 13.) He regretted that Luther, who at first was quite in accord with him, should see fit afterwards to ascribe to the written, outward, or preached word that power and efficacy which is inherent only in Christ, the Eternal Word. Luther translated Romans x. 17: "So kommt der Glaube aus der Predigt, das Predigen aber durch das Wort Gottes"—So faith cometh by preaching, but preaching by the word of God; while Schwenkfeld followed the original closely, rendering it in the equivalent of the English translation: So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

Upon the third point of difference Schwenkfeld would not allow Christ's human nature in its exalted state to be called a creature or created substance, holding that such denomination was "infinitely below His majestic dignity, reunited, as it is in that glorious state, with the Divine Essence." He also rejected infant baptism, holding that instruction and faith should precede baptism (Acts viii. 12, 13; Mark xvi. 15, 16; Matt. xxviii. 19); and that the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper were not intended as "a channel and means" through which the unregenerated participant could obtain salvation.

Having settled in his own mind the true meaning of the words uttered by our Lord at the institution of the sacramental feast, Schwenkfeld wrote out his views and submitted them to his friend Crautwald, who at first rejected them, and reproved him sharply for what he esteemed his heresy. Schwenkfeld, however, besought him to pray over the matter, and examine the words of the institution closely in the original tongue, declaring his conviction, in harmony with his theory of the operation of the Divine Word, that Christ had revealed the meaning to him. Crautwald finally promised to pray and think over the matter, and the result was his conversion. Speaking of this conference in one of his letters, Schwenkfeld says: "A fortnight later he (Crautwald) wrote me a Latin letter that the Lord Christ had revealed to him also the true meaning of the words."

Earnestly desiring harmony rather than polemic discussion, and hoping that an interchange of opinions would lead to an agreement with Luther, Schwenkfeld determined to seek a personal interview with him, and accordingly, in September, 1525, visited him at Wittenberg, and laid before him his views together with Crautwald's letter. Bugenhagen, Pomeranus, and Justus Jonas were present, and the conference, which continued several days, was marked by Christian courtesy. Luther was in a condescending mood and said to Schwenkfeld: "I say truly that I have been troubled with this doctrinal point for three years. Now your opinion is acceptable to me; it is very good if you can prove it. Finally, I say that your doctrinal point is not objectionable to me if you can prove it. I, also, was strongly inclined to it, and have long striven against it, and still have to strive against it."

Schwenkfeld's mission seemed to have been successful, at least so far as to justify the belief that his views would receive respectful consideration, and he parted from the reformers in friendship, and, we may well suppose, returned to his own country with a light heart. But he was doomed to disappointment. After two months Luther returned his manuscript and Crautwald's letter, and wrote him in his characteristic style, that he and Crautwald must cease to lead the people astray; that the blood of those whom they led astray would be upon their heads, and closed with these words: "Kurtzum, entwieder ihr oder wir müssen des Teufels leibeigen seyn, weil wir uns beiderseits Gottes Word rühmen"—In short, either you or we must

Troubles now began to thicken. Cut off from fellowship with the Lutherans, Schwenkfeld was none the less an object of the hatred of the Catholics. Even Ferdinand, King of Bohemia and Hungary, afterwards Emperor of Germany, whose liberality to the Protestants brought him into such disfavor at Rome that Pope Paul IV. refused to ratify his elevation to the imperial dignity, could not tolerate his teachings in respect to the Sacraments of the Lord's Supper and Baptism, misrepresented as they were by the Catholic clergy, and wrote to the Duke of Liegnitz to proceed to extreme measures for his repression—Silesia then being under the suzerainty of the Bohemian kings. But the Duke was so far in sympathy with Schwenkfeld that he had printed for the use of his own household a "Confession of Faith" drawn up by two of the latter's co-workers and most intimate friends,—Eckel and Werner,—and embodying the very doctrines which were so distasteful to the King's spiritual advisers. Moreover, a friendship, formed while Schwenkfeld was Counsellor to the Duke and never afterwards interrupted, forbade compliance with the King's command. But the Duke was powerless to protect his friend, and therefore advised him to retire from Silesia until more tolerant counsels should prevail at the royal court. He accordingly left Silesia in 1529 for a journey through Germany, but, as the sequel proved, never to return to his native land,—a circumstance which gave occasion for the story circulated by his enemies at the time, and since repeated by some German writers, that he had been expelled by the Duke at the instance of Ferdinand, a story that Schwenkfeld expressly refuted on several occasions, and which is disproved by his friendly correspondence with the Duke until the latter's death. Thenceforth he had no settled abiding-place, but moved about from city to city, defending his doctrines and faith in public conferences and discussions with the learned, and before the Magistrates at Augsburg, Nürnberg, Strasburg, Tübingen, and Ulm; often persecuted, and at least once—at Tübingen in 1535—tried for heresy, when he was so far acquitted as to be promised freedom of religious worship in private, though forbidden to speak publicly.

His life was one of unremitting labor. Besides preaching, he maintained an extensive correspondence with learned men and others of high rank throughout Germany and in Switzerland, and wrote many books and pamphlets, several editions of which were published—one in 1592, in four large quarto volumes. A spirit of deep and fervent piety pervaded his writings; and, although when controversy was forced upon him he stoutly defended his opinions upon disputed points of doctrine, he held that repentance of sin, purity of life, and humble trust in the cleansing efficacy of the blood of Christ were of infinitely more importance than subscription to dogmas and observance of the Sacraments. Hence he desired not to establish an independent church, but frequently declared, in his writings, his unwillingness to separate himself from any who loved Christ. Notwithstanding the irreconcilable differences between himself and Luther, and the harsh treatment which he had received from the latter after the Wittenberg conference, he never ceased to frankly acknowledge his obligations and express in the warmest terms his gratitude to the great reformer for the services he had rendered to him in common with all who were seeking the truth; and as late as 1543, less than three years before Luther's death, wrote him, earnestly and affectionately entreating him to examine his "Confession of Faith Concerning the Person of Christ," a work then just published, and point out his errors, if any. He died at the city of Ulm on the 10th of December, 1562, leaving a name unspotted by any charge except that of heresy, and that only in respect to the doctrines herein mentioned, and others held in common by the reformers. His opponents accorded him the praise of possessing great learning combined with modesty, meekness, piety, and a loving spirit.

Although the establishment of an independent church was a purpose never entertained by Schwenkfeld, he had, so far as successful teaching of his distinctive doctrines went, prepared the way for it. Many clergymen and noblemen and other influential and learned men in Silesia and throughout Germany, and in some localities, especially in the Principalities of Liegnitz and Jauer, almost the entire population, embraced his doctrines; and for a time his adherents enjoyed the public ministration of the Gospel in not a few of the churches where they were most numerous, not as a distinct sect, but as part of the reformed Church in its wider sense. But their prosperity was short-lived. State reasons inclined the Protestant princes to favor the larger following of Luther, and most of the evangelical pastors who adhered to Schwenkfeld's views were displaced, while but few were permitted to end their days with the churches which they served in Schwenkfeld's time, and these under admonitions to observe the Sacraments according to the Lutheran practice. Even Frederick II. of Liegnitz, whose friendship for Schwenkfeld never abated, yielded late in life to the pressure of the dominant influences in the Protestant Church, and dismissed the Court Preacher Werner for no other reason than that he continued to teach the same doctrines that the Duke approved when Schwenkfeld was near the Court. But Frederick could not entirely forget his first love, and while he lived no severity was exercised towards the people in his dominions.

After the Duke's death, however, they fared worse. That they, on the one hand, were Protestant and Evangelical, and on the other declined fellowship with the Lutherans, was enough to excite the intolerant spirit of the age, and invite persecution from all sides. Other circumstances conspired to bring them into disfavor alike with the clergy and the civil magistrates. Their rejection of infant baptism was sufficient, in the judgment of those who cared not to inquire further, to justify the charge that they were Anabaptists, and bring upon them the odium of the excesses committed by that sect but a few years before at Münster. Neither the explicit denial by Schwenkfeld in his lifetime of any sympathy with the Anabaptists, nor the blameless lives of the people, who rendered unto Cæsar the things that were Cæsar's, and strove according to their knowledge to render unto God the things that were God's, availed to free them from that charge. They were called Schwenkfelders in derision,—a name which they accepted,—and were stigmatized by almost every name that was supposed to convey a reproach. The new Duke, Frederick III., determined to stamp them out of his dominions, and issued a stringent decree against them, among other things imposing a fine of five hundred florins upon any person who should harbor an Anabaptist, by which he meant a Schwenkfelder, and later, ordered all their books to be seized and burned.

These measures had the opposite effect to that intended; the number of Schwenkfelders increased rather than diminished, but the persecutors did not gain wisdom from experience. Persecutions increased from year to year, until about 1580, when it seemed that every means that the ingenuity of man could devise was employed to coerce these people into either the Lutheran or the Catholic Church. In addition to former methods, the clergy refused to solemnize marriages until the contracting parties would partake of the Sacrament at the parochial church; men and women were dragged in chains into churches; leading men were expelled from the country; frequently when the people met at private houses for worship, as was their custom, they were arrested and imprisoned, often in dungeons, where many died from starvation, cold, and violent treatment, and others contracted diseases of which they died soon after their release ; and finally large numbers were sent to Vienna, and there condemned without trial to serve in the wars with the Turks, or as oarsmen on Mediterranean galleys. And so the weary years passed until the outbreak of the Thirty Years' War necessitated conciliation, when the Schwenkfelders accepted the horrors of that prolonged struggle as a grateful change from the cruelties of religious persecution. But soon after the peace of Westphalia the old persecutions were renewed with, if possible, increased rigor. From 1650 until 1658 they were especially severe.

Amid all these persecutions, without churches, without organization, robbed to a great extent of their religious books, and forbidden under severe penalties to reprint those that had been committed to the flames, the Schwenkfelders maintained their faith and their worship in the Fatherland for more than two centuries. The Bible was, indeed, allowed to them, and of this they were diligent readers ; and, notwithstanding the efforts to suppress their literature, copies of Schwenkfeld's works and the sermons and other writings of Johann Sigismund Werner, Michael Hiller, Erasmus Weichenhan, and Christian Hoburg were here and there preserved, and these served the multitude who met at the houses of their possessors to hear them read. The entire Sabbath, from morning till night, was spent in worship and in listening to the reading of such books.

Martin John, a learned physician of Hockenau, who wrote in the latter part of the seventeenth century, says : " Whoever had books, read on Sundays, and the others went to hear. The order was thus : In the morning, after each one had prayed when he rose from his bed, they assembled and sang the morning song standing ; then they prayed from a prayer-book and sang a hymn of invocation, especially to the Holy Ghost, all standing; after that they sang sitting, then prayed, and thereupon read some sermons; then prayed again and sang a couple of hymns; after that they ate at midday; then prayed again standing and sang an invocatory hymn, after which they read quite until evening, when they prayed and sang standing. This was the order on Sunday, and when the people came together in the week-time (for spinning) they then almost always sang, and when any one wished to go home they knelt down together and prayed."

Towards the close of the seventeenth century the spirit of intolerance relaxed, and the Lutheran Church presenting her attractive side to this people, large numbers, especially of the young, were won over to her communion, and from that time the Schwenkfelders gradually decreased, until in 1718 they numbered only a few hundreds where they had formerly been counted by the thousands, and had disappeared entirely from many villages where they had once been numerous. Reduced in numbers as they now were, their conversion to the Roman Catholic faith was, nevertheless, deemed by the Jesuits an object of sufficient importance to enlist the energies of the Order in that direction, and in furtherance of such object they commenced operations about this time at the Imperial Court. It was not difficult to persuade Charles VI. that the treaty of Westphalia in its interdiction of religious persecution did not protect the Schwenkfelders. An order to the government at Liegnitz to send in an official report of that people and their creed was therefore readily obtained, and in obedience thereto some of the leading men were summoned to appear at Liegnitz on the 19th of May, 1718, where they were questioned and required to hand in a written declaration or confession of their faith and some of their doctrinal and devotional books. Next, the Lutheran pastors at Harpersdorf and Neudorf were required to furnish lists of the Schwenkfelders in their respective parishes.

These proceedings were followed in December, 1719, by the appearance of two Jesuit priests bearing a "Legitimation," issued by the Superior Magistracy at Breslau, in the name and by command of the Emperor, accrediting them as missionaries for the conversion of the Schwenkfelders, in the following words :

"The Roman Emperor, also King in Germany, Spain, Hungary, and Bohemia, by his acting Privy Counsellor, Director, Chancellor, and Counsellors at the Royal Superior Domain in the Duchy of Upper and Lower Silesia.

"Offers first his courteous services, amity, and all blessings to the royal offices and domains, as also to the magistrates, rulers, and officers, and to all lower jurisdictions, and others. And whereas his Imperial Majesty, our most gracious master, by virtue of a most gracious rescript issued unto the Royal Superior Domain on the 18th day of September last, has graciously declared in what manner a mission should be established for the conversion of the Schwenkfelders living in the Principalities of Schweidnitz, Jauer, and Liegnitz, and has most graciously thought proper to appoint for this purpose two priests from the Jesuit Society, namely, the worthy P. P. Johann Milahn and Carolum Regent, and has furthermore graciously commanded that the Superior Domain should provide said Patres Missionarios with letters patent so that they might not be impeded in their beneficial undertaking, therefore all the magistrates, rulers, and other inhabitants, of whatever standing, office, or condition, are accordingly enjoined not to molest in any way those Patres Missionarios, nor to impede them in their ecclesiastical functions quo quo modo, under avoidance of severe animadversion, but moreover they are commanded to render them readily all possible assistance and help, and thus not to give cause for any complaint. In executing hereby the most gracious command of his Imperial Majesty we have no doubt of your acting in accordance therewith.

"BRESLAU, the 9th of October, 1719.

The royal government at Liegnitz added to this Legitimation of the Superior Magistracy, the following :

"All the hereinbefore named dominions, especially those at Harpersdorf, Ar-menruh, and Hockenau, where within the Principality of Liegnitz the most Schwenkfelders are living and dwelling, and all the inhabitants of the precinct of Goldberg, are hereby strictly directed, ordered, and commanded not to hinder the above-named two Patres Soc. Jesu in this mission charge conferred upon them by his Maj., not even under the pretence that they are overreaching the missionary object; but much less subject them to anything unbecoming or troublesome, but moreover to manifest to them with readiness all necessary assistance. By all of which ye shall show your proper regard, etc.

“W., COUNT OF WURBEN, Governor-General.

“LIEGNITZ, the 15th day of December, 1719.”

At first the missionaries required only the men to attend their services, and sought to win them by expounding the doctrines of the Catholic Church, and attempting to refute those of the Schwenkfelders. But in the latter they found no easy task. To the end that they might know what they had to refute, they demanded answers in writing to a number of questions. These were cheerfully given, and at considerable length; every proposition being supported by abundant citations of Scripture and from the Church Fathers. Finding the people so strongly fortified in their religious opinions, and so apt to defend them, the missionaries became irritated and threatened to adopt harsher methods after the close of the year 1720. Accordingly, early in the year 1721, it was announced that the women and children must be brought to the missionaries for instruction in the Catholic religion; and an imperial edict to this effect was exhibited.

There was now consternation among the people. So long as only men of mature judgment were required to hear the instructions of the missionaries, they feared nothing, but they could not endure the subjection of their tender offspring to teachings and influences which they regarded as pernicious. They therefore, on the 5th of May, 1721, dispatched three deputies—Christopher Hoffmann, Balthasar Hoffmann, and Balthasar Hoffrichter—to Vienna to sue for toleration. These deputies were graciously received by the Emperor, and remained at the Court five years, during which time they presented no less than seventeen memorials to the Emperor in person at audiences granted for that purpose, setting forth the persecutions suffered by their people at the hands of the missionaries and of the magistrates at the instigation of the missionaries, and praying for toleration and protection. But notwithstanding the Emperor's uniform kindness of manner at these audiences, and that he ordered a cessation of violence until further consideration, matters constantly grew worse in Silesia.

When parents refused to present their children for instruction, they were imprisoned; women were placed in the stocks and compelled to lie in cold rooms in the winter without so much as straw under them; and when imprisonment failed to bring the people with their children to the missionary services, fines and extortions were added. Marriages were forbidden unless the parties would promise to rear their offspring in the Catholic faith, and when young people went into other countries to be married, they were imprisoned for that on their return. The dead were not allowed Christian burial in the churchyards where their ancestors of the same faith for many generations slept, but were required to be interred in cattle-ways, and sorrowing friends were forbidden to follow the remains of loved ones to these ignominious resting-places. Hundreds of Schwenkfelders were so buried at Harpersdorf, Laugeneudorf, and Lauterseifen during the twenty years that the mission was maintained. The missionaries claimed guardianship of all orphan children of Schwenkfelders, and thus the last hours of the dying were embittered by the thought that their children must be educated in a faith that they themselves abhorred. And to prevent escape from the horrible situation in which they were placed, the people were forbidden to sell their property or, under any pretext, leave the country, and severe penalties were denounced against any person who should assist a Schwenkfelder to escape by purchasing his property, or otherwise.

The deputies made a final appeal to the Emperor for mercy on the 28th of July, 1725. That appeal was answered by the publication—in September—of the following decree:

“CHARLES THE SIXTH.

“DEAR FAITHFUL: We received your obedient report of March 20th, of this year, by which you have informed us of the condition of the ecclesiastical mission appointed for the conversion of those Schwenkfelder Sectariorum sojourning at several places in our Duchy of Silesia. As we now most graciously desire a better progress of the mission, we therefore provide:

“Primo, most graciously to wit: That the mission henceforth exercise all their power to accomplish the work of conversion with profit and good effect. And likewise “Secundo, that all watchful oversight of the mock preachers and Seductores from the authority of the country, and especially from those missionaries, be kept as heretofore commanded, and in case of any trespass at once to arrest the guilty and to punish them in terrorem aliorum, and to report to us aggravating occurrences if thought proper, and also we desire that the same may be understood concerning those Schwenkfelder inhabitants and housekeepers who permit Schwenkfelder conventicula in their houses, or who are leaders or instigators to persistence in those heretical errors. In such a manner that they shall be arrested as soon as the same shall be sufficiently apparent, brought here and their names entered. So it shall

The missionaries now bent all their energies to the accomplishment of the work in hand, and to the full exercised with the utmost rigor the powers granted to them, and were aided therein by the civil magistrates even to patrolling the highways to prevent the escape of any of the doomed people. Thus was this unhappy people shut up to the choice of either apostasy, or continued endurance of the ever-increasing miseries of their situation, or flight. The first was to the true Schwenkfelder simply impossible; the second was too horrible to be contemplated. They therefore resolved to escape from the country at all hazards.

The exodus commenced in the month of February, 1726. During that month and the months of March, April, and May following, upwards of one hundred and seventy families escaped by night from Harpersdorf, Armenruh, and Hockenau, and fled on foot to Upper Lusatia, then a part of the Electorate of Saxony, and found shelter at Wirsa near Greissenberg, Görlitz, Hennersdorf near Görlitz, Berthelsdorf, and Herrnhut. In consequence of the prohibition of sales of property by Schwenkfelders, and the police regulations to prevent emigration, they were obliged to leave all their property behind except what they could carry upon their backs or upon wheelbarrows. Consequently the less provident, who had laid up little or no money, found themselves in great destitution amongst strangers. They were, however, hospitably received, and treated with much consideration by the Senate of Görlitz, and by Count Zinzendorf, at Berthelsdorf and Herrnhut, and soon after their arrival assistance came to them unexpectedly from theretofore unknown friends in Holland. They lived here in a state of uncertainty as to the future for eight years.

The assistance received from Holland led to a correspondence with the Dutch benefactors, who strongly advised emigration to Pennsylvania. Some, however, began to purchase homes in Lusatia, and it is doubtful whether all would not have settled there permanently had not subsequent events proved the advice of the Hollanders to have been both timely and wise. In the spring of 1733 Count Zinzendorf informed them that they would be tolerated no longer in Lusatia, and referred them to the superior magistrate at Bautzen for the reasons. It was ascertained that application had been made for their enforced return to Silesia. They were, however, permitted to remain until the next spring.

Soon after Count Zinzendorf's announcement that protection would be withdrawn, two families emigrated to Pennsylvania, arriving at Philadelphia on the 18th of September (O. S.), 1733. Their report of the country, and the advice of the friends in Holland, determined about forty families to follow them. Their first care was to proceed orderly and obtain the permission of the sovereign to whom they proposed to transfer their allegiance. This secured, they set out in April, 1734, for Altona, in Denmark, where they arrived on the 17th of May. On their arrival at Altona, they found preparations made for their reception, and were most hospitably entertained until the 28th, when they embarked on three small vessels for Haarlem, arriving at the latter place on the 6th of June. Here they were received with open arms, and overwhelmed with kindness by their benefactors of former years.

The disinterested kindness of a mercantile house in Haarlem, composed of three brothers, Abraham, Isaac, and John Von Byuschanse, deserves more than a passing notice here. Their attentions to the strangers were not limited to seeing that there were no actual wants unsupplied; they strove by personal attentions to make the stay of the party in Haarlem enjoyable. The little ones especially came in for a full share of their kindly offices. Part of the contribution sent to Görtitz in 1726 for the relief of the destitute remained unexpended, and those having it in charge offered to return it to the donors, there being no further need of such assistance. The Messrs. Von Byuschanse would not listen to the offer, but directed the fund to be expended for the benefit of the poorer people when they should arrive in Pennsylvania. And not content with all that they had done, they insisted upon providing at their own expense a vessel for the transportation of the whole company to Philadelphia, and defraying the entire expense of the voyage. This noble benefaction was bread cast upon the waters. The descendants and successors in the business of the Messrs. Von Byuschanse met with reverses in the year 1790. Information of this fact coming to the Schwenkfelders in Pennsylvania, they, in grateful remembrance of the kindness shown to their own ancestors and to some of themselves in childhood more than half a century before, raised a considerable sum of money, and sent it to the relief of the distressed house.

The emigrants remained at Haarlem, enjoying the munificent hospitality of the Messrs. Von Byuschanse, until the 19th of June, when they proceeded to Rotterdam, and there embarked for Pennsylvania on an English ship, the St. Andrew, which had been chartered for them by their large-hearted friends, and touching at Plymouth, England, arrived at Philadelphia on the 22d of September (N. S.), 1734. On the next day all male persons over the age of sixteen years proceeded to the State-house, and there subscribed a pledge of allegiance to George II., King of Great Britain, and his successors, and of fidelity to the proprietor of the province. They spent the 24th in thanksgiving to Almighty God for delivering them out of the hands of their persecutors, for raising up friends in the times of their greatest need, and for leading them into a land of freedom, where they might worship Him unmolested by civil or ecclesiastical power. This day, the 24th of September, was thenceforth set apart to be observed by them and their descendants, through all time, as a day of Thanksgiving commemorative of the Divine goodness manifested in their deliverance from the persecutions of the Fatherland. To this day it is so observed.

The little band who had passed through so many trials together were now to separate. Some settled within the present limits of the city of Philadelphia, in the neighborhood of Chestnut Hill; others in the now counties of Montgomery, Berks, and Lehigh, there to convert the wilderness into happy homes, that in many instances have been enjoyed by their descendants till this day. It is needless to dwell on the hardships and privations of the first few years. They were such as were the common lot of all the early settlers of Pennsylvania, mitigated by the remembrance of what had been exchanged for them.

Dispersed as the people were, they nevertheless remained one in faith and in the bonds of mutual sympathy and love, and promptly set up the worship of Almighty God in their new home. They were without a pastor, but fortunately not without a man qualified by many gifts and graces to fill the sacred office. That man was George Weis. He had been selected on the eve of departure from Lusatia to "give instruction to the children, and render such other spiritual services as might be required," and had conducted the thanksgiving services on arrival in this country and perhaps other services, and having proved acceptable, was, in December, 1734, elected by the "house fathers" to the pastoral office. He served with great acceptance till his death, in 1740, when he was succeeded by Rev. Balthasar Hoffman.

It was natural to expect that the remaining Schwenkfelders would follow their emigrant brethren as rapidly as circumstances would admit. Such, however, was not the case. The very violence of the missionaries worked its own temporary cure, and for a time the necessity for flight was removed. Says Kadelbach:* "The respective local rulers, lords of the soil, saw with indignation the expatriation of their most active and peaceful subjects, and the decline of the prosperity of their communities." Thus was an influential public opinion awakened against the missionaries, not so much, indeed, by the outrageous cruelty of their methods, as by its effects on the public prosperity; but it was none the less potent, and its pressure was felt in a quarter where it was least expected to be respected. The same author says: "Even the Catholic clergy of the surrounding country declared themselves by no means in accord with the behavior of the missionaries, and were greatly dissatisfied with this sort of conversion." Of course this meant a change of tactics, and the Schwenkfelders had comparative rest for a few years.

* Ausführliche Geschichte Caspar Schwenkfelds und der Schwenkfelder in Schlesien, der Ober Lausitz und Amerika, Lauban, 1860.

About the close of the year 1735, however, the old methods of conversion were revived, and in the following year a number of families fled into Saxony, whence one family came to Pennsylvania the same year, and four others in 1737. Again there was anxiety about the loss of subjects, and, whether in consequence of representations by the local governments or of other promptings, an imperial order was issued temporarily suspending the exercise of the extraordinary powers of the missionaries, and directing a searching investigation of their conduct; and again there was comparative exemption from persecution.

But whatever steadiness of purpose Charles VI. manifested in the general administration of the affairs of the empire, his conduct towards the Schwenkfelders had always been characterized by fickleness. Each spasmodic exhibition of a tolerant disposition had been followed by a more intolerant decree from the Imperial Court, and it was too late now when, nearing the end of his career, he was engaged in securing guarantees of the inviolability, after his death, of the Pragmatic Sanction, to expect more firmness in his good intentions towards this people than he had before shown. The next spring a decree was published to the effect that the "Schwenkfelder heresy" must be trodden out, and its adherents coerced into the Catholic Church within one year. But it was a vain decree. The hour of final deliverance and, in some measure, of retribution, was approaching. Within the year appointed for the extermination of the Schwenkfelders Charles had paid the debt of nature, and Frederick the Great had vindicated his better title to Silesia, under the agreement of mutual succession made two centuries before between his ancestor, the Elector of Brandenburg, and the Duke of Liegnitz, and had proclaimed religious freedom in the long-misgoverned principalities.

Frederick was not content to merely put a stop to religious persecutions. Damage had been sustained by the country in the loss of valued subjects, and great wrongs had been done to individuals. He desired to repair the former and was willing to redress the latter even at the expense of the royal treasury. For that purpose he issued an edict in 1742 which reflects the highest honor upon himself, and, when the insignificance of their numbers is considered, pays a flattering tribute to the worth of the exiled Schwenkfelders. As exhibiting the estimation in which the ancestors of those whose names are contained in the following pages were held, and at the same time as a happy contrast to the before-recited decree of Charles VI., that edict is here presented in extenso:

“Edict to provide for the re-establishment of the so-called Schwenkfelders in Silesia and other provinces of his Royal Majesty; De dato Selowitz the 8th of March, 1742.

“We, Frederick, by the Grace of God, King of Prussia, Margrave of Brandenburg, Arch Chamberlain, and Elector of the Holy Roman Empire, etc., etc.

“Be it known to all to whom these presents may come: Whereas we do hold nothing to be so contrary to Nature, Reason, and Principles of the Christian Religion as the forcing of the subjects’ consciences, and persecuting them about any erroneous doctrines which do not concern the fundamental principles of the Christian Religion. We have, therefore, most graciously resolved that the so-called Schwenkfelders, who were exiled through an imprudent zeal for Religion, to the irreparable damage of commerce and of the country, be recalled into our Sovereign Duchy of Lower Silesia. We have, therefore, thought fit by these presents to assure all those who possess the said doctrine, upon our Royal word that they shall and may safely return not only into our Sovereign Duchy of Lower Silesia, but also into all our provinces, peaceably to live and trade there, since we not only do receive them into our special protection, but also will give them all necessary supplies for the promotion of their commerce. And all those who, several years ago, were deprived of their habitations and estates in our country of Silesia, shall be reinstated without any compensation in case those estates are not paid for by the new possessors. Such as will settle in our villages shall have farms assigned to them, and care shall be taken to provide them employment, and those who choose to live in towns shall, besides several ordinary Free years, have places assigned them gratis for the building of their houses, for which purposes they need only apply to our Military and Domainen Chambers.

"We do therefore command our Superior Colleges of Justice and Finance, as also all mediate Princes, Lords, Magistrates, etc., carefully to observe the same.

"In Witness whereof we have signed this present Edict with our own hand, and caused our Royal Seal to be affixed.

"Done at Selowitz, March 8th, 1742.

"FREDERICK,

"Per C. v. MUNCHON."

Much as they loved the Fatherland in spite of the cruel wrongs which they and their ancestors for two centuries had suffered, none of the Schwenkfelders in Pennsylvania availed themselves of the royal invitation to return to their former homes. They had become attached to the government under which they had for eight years enjoyed absolute freedom and a measure of prosperity that promised better things in the future than restoration of their estates in Silesia. They had come here to stay, and had laid foundations which they were loath to abandon. They had acquired permanent homes; they had established and thus far maintained public worship; remembering the words of Christ: For ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will, ye may do them good; they had established a Poor Fund, which, increasing with increased prosperity, has, for nearly a century and a half, satisfied every call upon it from within their communion and scattered its blessings outside; and they had established a School Fund which supplied every want intended to be supplied by the system of public instruction established by the State many years later. In short, they had taken root in the soil of Pennsylvania.

For many years they could not be said to have had an organization as a church. Indeed, the want of an organization was not felt while there were but few families, and they widely separated. But after the death of their second pastor, Rev. Balthasar Hoffman, in 1775, with increased membership, the necessity for an organization was recognized and soon received attention. Christopher Schultz, a man of great learning, ability, and zeal, and withal peculiarly fitted for the special work before him, was now, after fervent prayer for the divine guidance therein, called to the pastoral office. He addressed himself to the work of organization, and prepared a constitution or system of church government which was formally adopted on the 17th of August, 1782. For administrative purposes two districts were created, known as the "Upper District" and the "Lower District." It was provided that each district should elect a president, three elders, two trustees, and a treasurer of the School Fund, and a treasurer of the Poor Fund. Two congregations or individual churches were then organized, one in each district.

The duties of the elders are to see that church order is strictly observed, and to examine all matters in dispute between members and, if possible, adjust the same. One elder is elected every year in each district for the term of three years, and no elder can be re-elected until at least one year after the expiration of his last term. After the adoption of the common school system of the State the name of the School Fund was changed to "Literary Fund," and the fund itself devoted to literary purposes, and the duties of the officers of the Fund were correspondingly modified. The duties of the other officers are sufficiently indicated by their titles. The members on their part are enjoined to pay their debts without legal proceedings, and to "live quiet, virtuous, peaceable, Christian lives according to the will of Christ in all meekness and lowliness as the quiet in the land, and to be true and faithful in their spiritual as well as their temporal calling."

Owing to the dispersion of the members and the consequent impracticability of assembling any considerable numbers at any one point, no church edifices were erected until the year 1789. In that year a church was erected in the upper district, and soon after one in the lower. At later periods two more churches were built in each district, making six in all. Until these accommodations were provided, divine service was held at private houses, as it had been in the Fatherland, and in the absence of the pastor was conducted by one of the members. The service was opened with singing and prayer. The Gospel lesson for the day was then read, and sometimes expounded, after which a sermon from Weichenhan's, Werner's, or Hiller's Postille was read, followed by singing and prayer. While there was but a single pastor, there were a number of members who acceptably led meetings for worship and performed much of the pastoral work. At later periods the ministry was increased, until there are now three active ministers in each district.

The religious training and education of their children was from an early period regarded by the Schwenkfelders as a matter of prime importance. The exact date of the establishment of Kinder Lehr cannot now be ascertained, but the first appointment of George Weis before he was called to the full work of the ministry proves that the institution was brought to this country from Germany, and when the immigrants devoted, as they did, every alternate Sabbath to the instruction of the youth by catechetical lectures, it was evidently no new thing. Rev. Christopher Schultz gave an impetus to this department of church-work by his untiring labors therein, and by an excellent Catechism which he prepared for the instruction of children. The solicitude of the church for the children is shown in a ceremony originated in this country. As soon as conveniently may be after the birth of a child it is brought into church and the minister prays for its happiness and prosperity, and admonishes its parents to "bring it up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord according to the will of God." This service is sometimes performed at the home of the parents.

The literature of the Schwenkfelders is almost exclusively in the German language. Their printed works are mainly those hereinbefore incidentally mentioned, to which may be added the Erläuterung, etc., published in 1771, and of which a second edition appeared in 1830; and a work by the venerated Schultz, entitled "A Compendium of Christian Faith." But a large and valuable portion of their literature is yet in manuscript, being in part the writings of cotemporaries of Schwenkfeld and of others of the next century. A single volume appeared in an English dress in 1858, containing Schwenkfeld's "Heavenly Balm and Divine Physician," and "Threefold Life of Man," translated by the Rev. F. R. Anspach, D.D.

GENEALOGICAL RECORD.

GEORGE WEISS, the first minister of the society of Schwenkfelders in America, came to Pennsylvania, in 1734, with the colony, and settled in Lower Salford, then Philadelphia County. He was born in Harpersdorf, Lower Silesia, in Germany, in 1687. In 1720, when the Roman missionaries appeared in Silesia to convert the followers of Schwenkfeld to the Roman Catholic faith, George Weiss was selected on the part of the latter to write their confession of faith, or reply to the written questions of the missionaries. How well he performed this important task may be seen by reference to the "Erläuterung," page 85, and also page 341.* But the more these missionaries were worsted in argument, the more they had recourse to force; the result is well known. Weiss with his wife and other friends fled the country by night in the month of April, 1726, leaving their properties in the hands of their persecutors; came to Herrnhut in Saxony on the 5th of May. During his eight years' stay at Herrnhut he followed weaving and teaching. We do know that Rev. Christopher Schultz, Sr., then quite a young lad, came to Weiss for instruction in languages, and that the warmest friendship and attachment existed between teacher and pupil during the remaining years of Weiss's lifetime. In a historical manuscript written by Rev. Baltzer Hoffman, 1750, compiled by Christopher Hoffman, 1771, we find that our pilgrim fathers on the eve of their departure for America appointed Weiss as a kind of leader or teacher in spiritual things for adults, as well as catechist for the young, there and on shipboard, which appointment he accepted and carried out; and that about a year and a quarter after arriving in America (December 9, 1735) Weiss was formally appointed the first Schwenkfelder minister of the Gospel and catechist in this country, and that he officiated in that capacity in an acceptable manner up to the time of his death, which occurred on his farm on Skippack Creek, in Lower Salford, Montgomery County, on the 11th of March, 1740, in the fifty-third year of his age. His body lays buried at the meeting-house near by, where a handsome stone has been erected to his memory. Rev. B. Hoffman writes that Weiss was married in 1715 to Anna Meschter, of Langenneudorf; that they had one child, a son, who died when about a year old; that he also had a brother and a sister who both died young in Silesia; that shortly after their arrival in America he also lost his wife by death, and had her buried in the "Pilgrims' Cemetery" at Philadelphia. Thus Weiss himself was the only remnant left of the family this side of the grave, and having the spiritual welfare of his disorganized and scattered flock at heart, he labored for them in season and out of season; but in time he became considerably disappointed in seeing no better results, and finding so much lukewarmness and worldly-mindedness, etc., that during a spell of sickness which befell him in 1739, he was on the point of relinquishing his ministerial labors altogether; but with returning health, God gave him increased courage, and he kept on laboring in his Master's cause until within a few days of his unlooked for and early death.

* "Erläuterung für Caspar Schwenkfeld und die Zugethanen, Seiner Lehre." Printed in Tauer by Mullorn in 1771.

On the 3d of March, 1740, he was at Goshenhoppen, where in the evening he for the last time met and instructed his catechumens; and on the following morning, although in feeble health, and only six days before his death, he preached for the last time to his congregated friends. A synopsis of Weiss's remarks on these occasions is given by Hoffman at the close of his interesting Manuscripts.

Weiss was an example of unaffected piety, simplicity, and fidelity, well versed in spiritual knowledge, earnest and impressive in his ministrations. He was a worthy son of the venerable Casper Weiss, who, when quite old and weak in body, was called before the notorious Neander and compelled to stand in the latter's study for six long hours to give an account of his faith. See "Erläuterung," page 54, also page 59.

Anna 'Krauss, widow, died January 14, 1755, aged 81 years.

Balthasar Anders and his wife, Anna Hoffrichter, came in 1734 to Pennsylvania, with one child:

George, born, 1733, in Germany.

Anna, born April 8, 1736.

Abraham, born April 1, 1739.

Balthasar Anders was by trade a shoemaker, and lived in Towamencin Township, Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, upon the property now owned by George Anders, and there followed his trade until his death, which occurred May 25, 1754, aged 56 years. His wife died March 29, 1784, aged 83 years and 9 months.

His mother, who came with him to this country, was buried September 30, 1734, in Philadelphia, eight days after their arrival.

George Anders and his wife Maria came in 1734 to Pennsylvania; had one child:

Maria, born April 25, 1738.

George Anders died August 4, 1738.

Maria, his widow, died November 7, 1757.

George (Drescher) Dresher and his wife Maria came in 1734 to Pennsylvania, with their children:

Christoph.

Maria.

Rosina.

Maria, wife of G. D., died March 18, 1762.

George Drescher died March 3, 1774.

George Anders, brother of Balthasar, page 4, came to Pennsylvania in 1734, and died March 14, 1794, aged 83 years.

Tobias Hartranft and his wife Barbara, maiden name (Jaeckel) Yeakle, came in 1734 to Pennsylvania, with their children :

George.

Abraham.

Melchior.

Maria.

Rosina.

Tobias Hartranft died October 4, 1758, aged 74 years.

Barbara, wife of T. H., died February 15, 1764.

Governor John F. Hartranft is the sixth in descent from this Tobias.

Regina (Jaeckel) Yeakle, widow of Christopher, and sister of David and Christopher Heebner, see below, came to Pennsylvania in 1734, with her only son, Christopher.

R. Y. died April 4, 1753, aged 65 years and 5 months; her husband died in Germany previous to her emigration.

Balthasar Hoffman, son of Christopher Hoffinan, came to Pennsylvania in 1734, with his three children :

Anna.

Rosina.

Christopher, born in 1728.

Among the Schwenkfelders who arrived in Pennsylvania in the year 1734, Balthasar Hoffman,* who settled in Lower Salford Township, was one of the most eminent. He was born in Harpersdorf, Principality of Lieg-

* This sketch of the life of the Rev. Balthasar Hoffman was written by his son Christopher in German in 1777, and translated by Abraham H. Cassel for the forthcoming work of M. Auge, Esq., "The Prominent Men of Montgomery County, Pa." The compiler of this work cheerfully acknowledges the courtesy of Mr. Auge in allowing him to make use of this memoir.

nitz, in Silesia, Austria. By his own testimony he was born of "worthy poor and lowly parents," and was first reared to the trade of a weaver, occasionally working as a day laborer in the summer. He early embraced the religious principles of Caspar Schwenkfeld. He was tall in stature, lean in person, and "after his fiftieth year wore an entire white head." From his earliest youth he seems to have been very industrious and desirous of acquiring truth. By assiduous labor he soon gained a knowledge of Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, and by help of good books set himself to study the Sacred Scriptures, for which his knowledge of the languages gave him great facilities. He was very diligent in acquainting himself with Christian teachings around him, and especially of those promulgated by Caspar Schwenkfeld.

In 1719 the Reformation had made great progress in Silesia, and the Catholic Church in 1721 sent a mission to convert the people back to the old faith, at first laboring with them mildly, but soon after committing great acts of violence. The persecuted people in 1721, therefore, resolved to send an embassy to the Emperor, to implore toleration. Of this body Balthasar was one. During this effort, which lasted five years, Hoffman delivered no less than seventeen memorials to the royal ruler. At last, however, in 1726, the mission turned the heart of the sovereign still more against the reformed people, so that Balthasar dared not show himself by day, but had to return by night, taking with him to Ober Lausitz his wife and two daughters. Even there he was not safe, but fled again with his gray-haired father from Vienna by way of Prague to Lausitz, and obtained the protection of Count Zinzendorf. Here he resided eight years, during which time a son was born to him. As tolerance was not even here assured he, with many others, concluded to emigrate to Pennsylvania, where William Penn had promised religious freedom to all. This resolution was formed in 1734, and on September 22 of the same year, with his wife and family, "under the guidance of the good Lord they arrived at Philadelphia, and offered praise to God for his graciousness to them." He was especially grateful that no evil had befallen them on the way, and further that kind friends in Holland had sent himself over free and without cost to him. He did not remain in the city, but removed to the country, "where, too, the grace of God provided for him and his." During all this time he continued a diligent Bible reader and Christian teacher to those around him. Here he freely worshipped God according to the dictates of conscience. Upon the death of the Rev. George Weiss, the first minister of the Schwenkfelders in America, in 1740, Hoffman was chosen to officiate in his stead. Not being constitutionally strong in body, he several times withdrew, especially in 1749, when he became afflicted on his breast and debilitated in his power of speech and of singing. Still, demands were made upon him, particularly for outdoor services, as catechizing the children; but by the help of God he labored till the weight of years made it impossible. Nor did he ever tire in his many duties. His Sabbath forenoons, afternoons, or evenings, were employed in writing, reading, and singing. He left many letters and writings on Holy Scripture and Christian teachings, prompted by the questions of others as well as of his own conception, thus at once rendering service to his brethren in time to come. He also left hymns. Of these writings we have a catalogue. "To him idleness and the want of truth were of great moment, seeing how God's gift of freedom was misapplied."

The closing years of Balthasar Hoffman's life were spent in a small room, spinning; yet daily would he read, write, sing, and pray. And as he had long been blessed with bodily health, so God protected him against much and severe sickness in his last days. Gradually, however, his sanctified spirit was loosened from its earthly tabernacle, and nature sank year by year, till December 21, 1774, when he was attacked with vertigo and increasing debility, and on July 11, 1775, in his 89th year, he passed peacefully away. His wife, Ursula, died May 15, 1767, aged 80 years, and both lie buried in the Schwenkfelder burying-ground belonging to the congregation in Lower Salford. Balthasar Hoffman and wife left three children, Anna, Rosina, and Christopher, who succeeded his father as minister of the society; his children were all born in Europe. All three were married, but the son left no issue. There are descendants of the daughters, however, to the fifth and sixth generations.

He remained an acceptable minister of the Schwenkfelders from the death of Weiss in 1740 until the time of his death. He resided on a tract of land by the east side of Skippack Creek, two miles west of Franconia village, now owned by Henry Derstine. He was a man of eminent wisdom and piety, and left behind him a catalogue of his writings, embracing fifty-eight tracts, all on theology and practical religion, besides eighty-three letters on various kindred topics.

Christopher Hoffman, the father of Balthasar, died in Saxony, under the protection of Count Zinzendorf; he, together with his son Balthasar and Balthasar Hoff-richter, constituted the embassy to the court of Charles VI, at Vienna.

David (Huebner) Heebner and his wife Maria came in 1734 to Pennsylvania. Their children were:

Christoph.

Susanna.

Rosanna, born May 9, 1738.

George, born June 21, 1744.

David Heebner died December 27, 1784.

Maria, widow of D. H., died June 11, 1793.

David Yeakel came to Pennsylvania in 1734, and was on the sick list when he landed at Philadelphia. No record of the time of his death can be found, nor of his wife; it is supposed that he was a widower when he arrived with his children, six sons and two daughters, namely:

Christoph.

Abraham.

Balthasar.

Jeremias.

Hans Heinrich.

Caspar.

Susanna, married George Weigner.

Rosina.

George Heydrick and his wife Eve came in 1734 to Pennsylvania.

George Heydrick died September 5, 1765.

Eve, widow of G. H., died January 4, 1776. No issue.

Caspar Heydrick and his wife Eve came in 1734 to Pennsylvania.

Eve, wife of C. H., died December 9, 1742.

Caspar Heydrick died April 13, 1761, aged 80 years. No issue.

Christoph Kriebel and his wife Maria came in 1734 to Pennsylvania, with their children :

George.

Susanna, died January 30, 1740.

Christoph.

Anna.

Maria.

Rosina, died February 23, 1750.

Maria, wife of C. K., died April 11, 1738.

Christoph Kriebel died May 14, 1741.

Caspar Kriebel and his wife Susanna came in 1734 to Pennsylvania. Their children were :

George, born November 3, 1732, in Saxony, Europe.

Abraham, born October 8, 1736, in Pennsylvania.

Susanna, wife of C. K., died April 17, 1769.

Caspar Kriebel died February 16, 1771; he lived in Towamencin, upon the property of his descendant, Abm. K. Kriebel, which he owned.

Melchior Kriebel and his wife Anna, daughter of Christopher Drescher, came in 1734 to Pennsylvania. Their children were :

David, born March 14, 1736.

Susanna, born October 28, 1739.

Rosanna, born December 31, 1742. Died January 17, 1743.

Melchior, born May 26, 1746.

Rosina, born September 4, 1751. Died December 26, 1820.

Anna, wife of M. K., died December 26, 1789, aged 79 years.

Melchior Kriebel died February 14, 1790, aged 80 years and 2 weeks. The property of Abm. Rittenhouse in Towamencin was his residence. He was a brother of the above Caspar.

Melchior Meschter and his wife Regina came in 1734 to Pennsylvania. Their children were:

George, died August 1, 1801.

Susanna, born April 16, 1739.

Maria, born April 26, 1742.

Christopher, born December 17, 1746.

Regina, wife of M. M., died December 14, 1773.

Melchior Meschter died October 5, 1776.

George Reinewald and his wife Susanna came in 1734 to Pennsylvania, with their children:

George Reinewald died July 10, 1755.

Susanna, widow of G. R., died January 17, 1781, over 80 years of age.

Christoph Reinewald and his wife Susanna came in 1734 to Pennsylvania. Their children were:

Balthasar.

Christoph, born March 6, 1737.

David, born March 13, 1739.

Abraham, born November 4, 1740. Died July 30, 1745.

Melchior, born March 21, 1744.

Susanna, born July 10, 1749.

Susanna, wife of C. R., died July 23, 1749.

Christoph Reinewald died January 14, 1770.

Gregorius Schultz and his wife Rosina Yeakel came in 1734 to Pennsylvania. Their children were :

Susanna.

George, died August 17, 1751.

Rosina.

Anna, born November 10, 1738.

Maria, born February 28, 1741. Died December 18, 1779.

David, born September 3, 1743.

Rosina, wife of G. S., died March 31, 1769.

G. S. died May 9, 1772.

Gregorius Schultz was a son-in-law of David Yeakel, page 9, and upon his arrival in Pennsylvania he went to Macungie, in Lehigh County, then Bucks, where he located upon the Jordan Creek in company with his brothers-in-law, Balthasar and Hans Heinrich Yeakle, but after some years returned to Upper Hanover, then Philadelphia County, and purchased a large tract of land upon which he lived the remainder of his life. The Yeakles returned a short time previously.

Mathias Yeakle and his wife Rosina Ott came in 1734 to Pennsylvania, with their children :

Maria, died July 14, 1752.

Regina, died July 4, 1758; married a Lutheran minister, September 30, 1754.

Mathias Yeakle died September 20, 1756.

S. Y., widow of H. H. Y., died September 23, 1793, aged 84 years.

Hans Heinrich Yeakel became a large landowner in the Hosensack Valley, in Lower Milford Township, now Lehigh County, Pa. He purchased what was then known as the Hamilton tract, containing about 500 acres of excellent farm land, which at his death he divided among his sons. His descendants became quite numerous, and much of his property is still owned by them. He had gone with his brother-in-law, Gregorius Schultz, to the Jordan in Lehigh County, but the location being too much exposed, on account of Indian depredations, he returned in a short time afterwards and settled permanently in the Hosensack.

Balthasar Krauss, son of Anna Krauss, widow (page 3), married Susanna Hoffman January 16, 1736. Had issue:

Rosina, born April 10, 1737.

Susanna, born August 29, 1738.

Barbara, born July 22, 1742.

Balthasar, born November 28, 1743.

C. S. died May 8, 1748.

The widow afterwards married Christopher Yeakel.

Christopher Yeakle, son of Regina and Christopher Yeakle (page 5), married Maria, daughter of Susanna and Balthasar Schultz (page 14), August 9, 1743.

Their children were:

Susanna, born October 8, 1744.

Maria, born September 21, 1747.

Regina, born October 1, 1749.

Abraham, born March 14, 1752.

Anna, born July 16, 1755.

Christopher, born October 7, 1757.

Maria, wife of C. Y., died March 4, 1807, aged 89 years.

C. Y. died January 3, 1810, aged 91 years and 9 months.

Christopher Yeakle was about 18 years of age when he came to Pennsylvania with his mother in 1734; his father died in Germany. He apprenticed himself to a cooper, and continued during life to follow his trade. He built the log-house in 1743 (yet standing, 1879) at Cresheim, Germantown Township, Philadelphia, which was his dwelling until nearly the Revolution, when he purchased the property on the summit of Chestnut Hill, now owned by his granddaughter, and died there at a very advanced age. By his industrious and frugal habits he died possessed of considerable property. His descendants are quite numerous in Philadelphia and in Montgomery County, Pennsylvania.

George Schultz, son of Melchior Schultz, brother of Rev. Christopher (page 24), married Maria, daughter of Abraham Yeakel, January 31, 1744. Their children were:

Lower Harpersdorf, Dukedom Liegnitz, Silesia, March 26, 1718. He was the youngest son of Melchior Schultz (who was born in 1680) ; had two brothers, George and Melchior. In the spring of 1726, owing to religious persecutions then prevailing, this family and other friends left their homes and possessions and fled the country by night, came to Berthelsdorf, in Saxony, May 1. Here young Christopher was employed as a shepherd boy, and also learned the weaver's trade, besides being occupied with spinning and other work. He evinced a great desire for books and learning, the means to obtain which not being at hand he was granted whatever time he could gain by extra exertions ; this inducement was irresistible, and no doubt marks the beginning of a new era in the lad's career. He now performed his allotted work in two-thirds of the ordinary time, thus gaining two days per week, during which he would hasten to his kind friend and teacher, Rev. George Weiss, to study languages. In these studies he advanced with astonishing alacrity ; before he was ten years of age he had acquired a pretty general knowledge of the Latin, and also knew the rudiments of the Greek and Hebrew languages. After enjoying comparative liberty and quiet under the kind protection of Count Zinzendorf for nearly eight years, the important question again arose whether the family and their religious friends should leave the country or their faith, and by the aid of Him in whom they believed and whom they served, it was again decided in the right way ; but both parents went to rest Melchior Schultz, was born June 26, 1680, and died February 15, 1734, in the fifty-fourth year of his age at Berthelsdorf, Saxony, about two months before the then contemplated emigration. The last-named Melchior Schultz was the father of George, Melchior, and Christopher Schultz.

in death shortly before the then contemplated emigration to America.

The three orphan boys, George, Melchior, and Christopher, joining some forty Schwenkfelder families, forever turned their backs upon their native land, embarked for Philadelphia, where, after a tedious voyage of about five months, they arrived September 22, 1734. Young Christopher kept a diary ("Reise Beschreibung"), which is found in print in the "Erläuterung," of which book he also was the chief compiler, and which gives a brief history of the persecutions which befell Schwenkfeld and his followers in Silesia, and an impartial exposition of the doctrinal points upon which they and their opponents differed, etc.

At a comparatively early period Christopher Schultz was looked to as a leading spirit among the Schwenkfelders, and was chosen as their Gospel minister, in which capacity he served faithfully and efficiently to the end of his life.

He was the chief organizer of the Schwenkfelders into a formal religious body or congregation, composing their present catechism, collating their hymn-book, writing their constitution (Grund Regeln), and a "Compendium" of religious doctrines of faith of 600 octavo pages—an excellent work, eminently catholic, and, like the catechism, everywhere substantiated by Bible truths and references.

For many years, up to the end of the American Revolution, Father Schultz kept up a correspondence with friends left in Germany; copies of some of his letters and of those written in reply (all in German manuscript) are still at hand. Father Schultz lived in stirring times and he experienced a great deal. At the age of eight years we find him with the family fleeing the country at night. A year and more thereafter we find him employed as a shepherd boy near Berthelsdorf, in Saxony, book in hand, translating from Latin into German extracts from the "Zehen Haupt Verfolgungen Der Ersten Christen." At the age of sixteen he was on the British ship St. Andrew, a close observer and recorder of the events of a five months' voyage to the land of Penn. At the age of eighteen we find him and his two brothers in a dense wood forty-two miles north of Philadelphia, two miles west of what is now the borough of East Greenville, selecting a site for their future home, which they found at a spring where the bear and deer at first seemed inclined to dispute possession. Here, in 1736, with the assistance of Melchior Neuman, carpenter, they commenced felling the tall oaks, rolling them on a scaffold over a trench, sawed them by hand into three-inch plank, whereof the outside walls of their capacious two-story house was constructed. Wagon-wheels were made of the same article, horse collars skilfully plaited of straw, traces of hemp, grubbing hoe preceded the plough with wooden mould-board; no saw-mill was within reach, no grist-mill within fifteen miles. For clothing the Schultz's raised their own flax and wool, spun it with the aid of a single spindle (without wheel or machinery of any kind), erected a weavers' loom, wove the yarn into cloth. When the supply exceeded the wants they took it to Philadelphia, and, on one occasion, sold it to the Governor of the Province at eight shillings per yard. The Governor spoke very highly of their linen, which encouraged them not a little. The three brothers lived together in peace and harmony, and at the end of about ten years, under the blessings of Providence, they had considerably extended their landed domains, increased their flocks, and filled their coffers, so that the question which once engaged the attention of Abraham and Lot, at their parting, now agitated the minds of the Schultz brothers. The result was, Melchior and Christopher sold out to their elder brother George; the former went about three miles north, bought a farm there; Christopher, having married in 1744, now bought and settled on what is at present the fine farm of his great-grandson, Henry S. Schultz, near Clayton, Berks County. Here he lived to the end of his life. Let us here take a short retrospective glance at the situation of our plundered and persecuted Pilgrim fathers in their temporary home in Saxony, which certainly was not one of ease and comfort, and the family of Melchior Schultz was no exception to this; and when death came, removing a kind father and a loving mother, the three orphan boys must have felt like lambs cut off from the flock and left alone in the wilderness. There was yet one way left for them; their united bleatings could be heard by the ever-listening ear of the Good Shepherd on high. But we were going to say, situated as they then were, a liberal school education was out of the question. In this dilemma they may have taken the advice of St. James, 1:5. Be this as it may, in Christopher Schultz we find a learned man with very little schooling. His marvellous memory, and all his mental and spiritual faculties, were of the highest order, and he was an industrious and attentive reader. Among the early Fathers of the Church St. Augustine seems to have been one of his principal favorites. Among the German reformers of a later day, Schwenkfeld was pre-eminently so.

Christopher Schultz, as already indicated, was gifted with a good judgment, with wisdom to discern right and fortitude to defend and execute it; owing to this he was frequently called upon to settle differences. He had a mild but convincing way of telling the reprobate, "Thou art the man." In his ministrations and writings he endeavored to give the true spiritual sense of the Scriptures; his chief aim and end being the glorification of God and the well-being of man.

He could work on his farm, or at the loom, exercise deeds of kindness, courtesy, and condescension, without compromising his never failing dignity. His life motto was "SOLI DEO GLORIA." (To God alone the honor.) We have no evidence that this motto ever appeared on the walls of his study, but his works prove that they were inscribed in his heart. Among the early records of Berks County, we find the last will and testament of Christopher Schultz; it is a model of its kind, is dated the 24th day of October, A.D. 1788, and is witnessed by his friends, Abraham Schultz, Gregory Schultz, and George Kriebel; in it the testator, among other things, disposes of about 800 acres of land in Berks, Montgomery, and Northumberland counties, Pa., embracing two of the finest farms in Eastern Berks; one of them, late that of his brother Melchior, however, had been bought by the testator for and in the name of his son Andrew. His family, all of whom survived him, consisted of his wife Rosina, a daughter of Baltzer Yeakel, and four children, Regina, Andrew, David, and Susanna.

It might be asked: How is it that the once fatherless, motherless shepherd and weaver-boy of Berthelsdorf had so much property at his disposal? See Matt. 19: 29.

Or,

“Es gilt dem Hoehsten allesgleich
Den Reichen arm und kleinzumachen,
Den Armen aber gross und reich.”

Father Schultz died on the 9th of May, 1789, aged 71 years, 1 month, 13 days; the immediate cause of his death was apoplexy, although he had been indisposed some time previous to the attack.

His last words, barely audible to the family, were:

“A little while, and ye shall not see me, and again a little while and ye shall see me, because I go to the Father.”

The Rev. Chistopher Hoffman, of Skippack, preached the funeral sermon, taking for his text the words of St. Paul, 2 Timothy 4: 7-8: I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, etc.

This sermon, fully written out and remaining in the family, has lost nothing of interest on account of its great age.

A. S. died December 25, 1822, aged 76 years, 8 months. Regina, his widow, died November 9, 1826, aged 77 years, 1 month, 8 days.

Abraham Schultz, the eldest son of George Schultz, was born in Upper Hanover, March 23, 1747. In his youth, after some brief school instruction, he became, not only a great lover of books and literature, but an industrious reader, and being gifted with a comprehensive mind and retentive memory, he soon acquired a good deal of general knowledge, of which he made good use through life. He was a member of the religious society of Schwenkfelders, and served them in the capacity of trustee, school-inspector, teacher, and catechist, and the community in which he lived as scrivener and counsellor, and in the year 1796 was elected a member of the General Assembly of the State from Montgomery County.

He died nearly 76 years of age. Among some papers left at his demise there were a few letters written by him that are quite interesting. One of them, dated June 14, 1783, to Chr. Groh, J. F. Heintze, Jeremiah Heydrick, and others, in Germany, giving an account of the then existing situation of the followers of Schwenkfeld in this country, and how they fared during the troublous times of the "Revolution;" giving also some of the incidents, effects, and consequences of the war then just closed.

Another letter, to his young friend Dr. Christopher Heydrick, who was then about entering upon the practice of his profession. The letter is full of sound sense and good advice, and is still carefully treasured up by the doctor's worthy descendants in Western Pennsylvania.

Another, written in 1820, in reply to a request of Pastor Plitt, editor of the "Americanische Ansichten," constitutes a short defence of Schwenkfeld against the unwarrantable attacks of some German historians and other perverters of truth; also a brief account of the ministers, places of worship, schools, etc., of the followers of Schwenkfeld in America.

David Schultz, son of Gregory Schultz (page 13), married Catharine, daughter of Melchior Hartranft (page 36), October 6, 1772. They had issue:

Sarah, born November 3, 1773. Died February 3, 1775.

Christina, born September 29, 1775.

Magdalena, born April 4, 1778. Died April 4, 1802.

Maria, born February 13, 1781. Died January 22, 1809.

Julianna, born April 22, 1784.

Gabriel, born January 28, 1789.

Catharine, wife of D. S., died August 27, 1804, aged 51 years.

D. S. died January 25, 1810, aged 66 years, 6 months, and 3 days. He was a farmer, and lived in Upper Hanover, Montgomery County, Pa.

George Kriebel, son of George Kriebel (page 22), married Esther, daughter of George Wiegner (page 33), October 15, 1772. Their children were:

1 Christopher, born September 27, 1774. Died June 2, 1779.

George, born July 28, 1777. Died May 28, 1779.

2 Christopher, born October 8, 1779.

Susanna, born November 11, 1782. Died February 15, 1789.

Hood, and died December 5, 1873.

Caroline, born January 27, 1797.

Charles H., born March 5, 1799.

Chr. H. died February 9, 1856.

Dr. Christopher Heydrick was born in Springfield Township, Philadelphia County (now Montgomery), April 7, 1770. In his youth, after having fitted himself by a thorough course of education, he studied the science of medicine under the instruction of the celebrated Dr. Benjamin Say, of Philadelphia, and in 1792, at the age of 22 years, graduated with high honors at the University of Pennsylvania. Six years afterwards, in 1798, he was elected a member of the Philadelphia Society of Medicine, and during the same year, and for some time afterwards, he held the position of Physician to the Philadelphia Hospital. In 1815 he was elected Resident Member of the Cabinet of Sciences in Philadelphia, an honor which has been conferred upon few, and those the most learned and scientific men in the country.

Having been engaged in the practice of medicine, and with much success, at Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, and in the city of Philadelphia, from 1792 until 1819, he at the latter date removed to the borough of Mercer, in Mercer County, Pennsylvania. He resided in this place several years, and had a very successful and lucrative practice in his profession. But from his youth having a passion for agriculture, he determined to abandon his profession and enjoy for the remainder of his life his favorite pursuit, and having this object in view, he removed from Mercer to a farm in the valley of French Creek, Venango County, where he continued to reside until the day of his death. During the last ten or twelve years of his life he was afflicted with blindness.

STUDY OF THE EFFECTS OF VITAMIN D ON THE METABOLISM OF CALCIUM IN THE HUMAN BODY

The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of vitamin D on the metabolism of calcium in the human body. The study was conducted in a hospital setting, and the subjects were healthy adults. The study was divided into two groups: a control group and a treatment group. The control group received a placebo, and the treatment group received a daily dose of vitamin D. The study lasted for 12 weeks. The results of the study showed that the treatment group had a significantly higher level of calcium in their blood compared to the control group. This suggests that vitamin D has a positive effect on the metabolism of calcium in the human body. The study also found that the treatment group had a higher level of calcium in their urine, which is consistent with the findings of other studies. The study was well-controlled and the results are reliable. The study was conducted in a hospital setting, and the subjects were healthy adults. Schwenkfelder Society many years, until his death.
This record, so far as it relates to the genealogical record of the members of said religious society, and their descendants who adhered to their organization, was preserved by him in German manuscript to about the year 1846. In the earlier days, to about 1804, a few records had been kept, but about that time abandoned, when the Rev. Mr. Heebner, copying from those earlier ones, continued his own down to the date mentioned. Without his industry and care it would have been impossible to compile the present work for want of a continuous record. Of a cheerful disposition, and of active and industrious habits, Mr. Heebner always retained the confidence of the entire community in which he lived.

Christopher Schultz was a grandson of the Rev. Christopher Schultz (page 24), and lived in Hereford, Berks County, on the fine farm belonging to the estate of his son Thomas, which he managed very successfully. He was a minister of the Society of the Schwenkfelders, and until his death continued in the ministry. He always drew crowded audiences wherever he preached, whether in his own society or when occupying the pulpit of some neighboring denomination, which was very frequently the case. His fine personal appearance and great fluency of speech always commanded the attention of his audience, accompanied as it was with the most fervent and impressive piety.

The social qualities of his well-stored mind were of the highest order, tempered as it was by a true Christian spirit; he always commanded the respect of those he came in contact with.

The following table shows the results of the study of the effect of the various factors on the rate of the reaction. The rate of the reaction was measured by the amount of gas evolved in a given time. The results are given in the following table:

Factor	Rate of Reaction
Temperature	Increases with temperature
Concentration	Increases with concentration
Surface Area	Increases with surface area
Catalyst	Increases with catalyst

The results of the study show that the rate of the reaction is affected by the various factors mentioned above. The rate of the reaction increases with temperature, concentration, surface area, and catalyst. The rate of the reaction is not affected by the volume of the reaction mixture.

John F. Hartranft was born in New Hanover Township, Montgomery County, Pa., December 16, 1830. He is the sixth in descent from Tobias Hartranft, whose record is given on page 2. In his seventeenth year he entered the preparatory department of Marshall College, Pa., where he remained two years, and then entered Union College, Schenectady, New York, where he graduated in 1853. In 1854 he was appointed Deputy Sheriff of Montgomery County by Sheriff Boyer, and again by Sheriff Rudy in 1855. Having read law with James Boyd, Esq., and Hon.

A. B. Longaker, he was admitted to practice law in 1859.

He was Colonel of the 1st Regiment Montgomery County Militia when President Lincoln issued his call for 75,000 men for the defence of the Government. Colonel Hartranft at once tendered the services of his regiment and was accepted; this was the 4th Pennsylvania Regiment, enlisted for ninety days. Colonel Hartranft, upon the expiration of the time of service of the 4th Regiment, served upon the staff of General Franklin at the battle of Bull Run. July 27, 1861, he was commissioned Colonel in the three years' service, and in the following September organized, at Camp Curtin, Harrisburg, the 51st Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. On the 18th of November the regiment left Camp Curtin, and was assigned to the corps of General Burnside, who was organizing the North Carolina expedition.

It is not intended to give an extended biography of General Hartranft in this work, as the active part he took in the suppression of the Rebellion would involve too large a space, but merely to note the chief incidents of his valuable and busy life.

He participated in the battles of Roanoke Island, Newbern, second Bull Run, Chantilly, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Vicksburg, Jackson, Campbell's Station, Knoxville, Wilderness, Spottsylvania, North Anna, Cold Harbor, Petersburg Mine, Weldon Railroad, Ream's Station, Poplar Spring Church, first and second Hatcher's Run, Fort Steadman, Petersburg, and Richmond. For his gallantry at Spottsylvania Court-house he was commissioned a Brigadier General, dating from May 12, 1864. For meritorious services he was breveted Major-General March 25, 1865.

This ended the military career of General Hartranft. In August, 1865, he was nominated Auditor-General, and elected in October of that year by 23,000 majority; in the fall of 1868 he was again elected to the same office by a handsome majority.

Upon the expiration of the second term of Governor Geary's administration, General Hartranft was placed in nomination for Governor of Pennsylvania by the Republican party, and after one of the most bitter political contests known in the history of this State, General Hartranft was elected by a triumphant majority of 35,000. On the 26th of May, 1875, Governor Hartranft was again nominated for the office of Chief Magistrate of his native State. This time he was unanimously placed in nomination by the Republican party, the only instance in which a Governor had no opposition in convention for a second term in the history of Pennsylvania. This time he was elected by a majority of over 12,000. Immediately upon his retirement from the Governorship of Pennsylvania President Hayes appointed him Postmaster of the city of Philadelphia, which position he now holds.

Governor Hartranft at present holds the position of Commanding General of the National Guard of Pennsylvania, by appointment of Governor Hoyt. President Johnson appointed him Colonel of the 34th Regiment of the U. S. Army, dating from the 28th of July, 1866, but as he intended to retire to civil life he declined the appointment by suitable acknowledgment.

In the Convention of the Republican party, held at Cincinnati, in the spring of 1876, for the purpose of nominating a candidate for President of the United States, Governor Hartranft's name was presented by his friends, but after several ballotings Governor Hayes, of Ohio, was placed in nomination.

Whatever position General Hartranft was called upon to fill, he always discharged its duties with distinguished ability, whether on the field of battle or as the Executive of the State of Pennsylvania. His modesty, firmness, and integrity won for him the confidence of all who had any business to transact with him.

The first settlement in Boston was made in 1630 by a group of Puritan settlers from England. They came to the city in search of religious freedom and a place to practice their faith. The settlers were led by John Winthrop, who gave them the name "Boston" in honor of his hometown in England.

The city grew rapidly in the years following its founding. By 1680, it had become one of the largest and most important cities in the New England colonies. The city was known for its strong religious and political institutions, and its role in the American Revolution.

The city's growth continued through the 18th century. By 1800, it had become one of the largest and most important cities in the United States. The city was known for its strong religious and political institutions, and its role in the American Revolution.

Anna Krauss, mother of Balthasar (page 3), when she came to Pennsylvania in 1733, had at least two daughters besides her son Balthasar: Maria, who married Leonard Knopf and left issue, and Susanna, who married — Neis, and died July 28, 1794, and another son, Melchior, who was of unsound mind, died September 16th, 1779.

Reuben Yeakel, son of Carl Yeakel (page 120), is the Rev. Reuben Yeakel, Bishop of the Evangelical Association, and resides in Norristown, Pa. His jurisdiction as Bishop of the Church embraces the Middle and Western States of the Union.

Christopher Heebner (page 74) was a farmer, and lived and died on the farm now owned by Governor Hartmanft, in Norriton Township, north of the Borough of Norristown, Pa.

Hans Heebner (page 14) had a son Melchior, who married, February 11, 1752, and had two daughters:

Elizabeth, born April 11, 1753.

Margaret, born October 16, 1755.

This is all of the record we have of this family.

Maria, daughter of Gregorius Meschter (page 15), married December 20, 1762, to whom unknown.

George Yeakel came to Pennsylvania in 1734. He lived with Dr. Wagner (page 33), in Worcester Township, and died single, September 11, 1764, aged 68 years. He was possibly a relative of Dr. Wagner.

Anna, daughter of Melchior Schubert (page 56), married a man by the name of Ebbert, and died February 21, 1845.

Maria, daughter of Christopher Reinewald (page 43), married Godfried Bostan, and died February 3, 1826, aged 55 years.

Maria Krauss, daughter of David Krauss (page 85), married Joseph Bitting, and whose daughter married Anthony Schultz (page 185). Maria Bitting died October 18, 1837.

Maria Krauss (page 18) was sister to Ursula, wife of the Rev. Balthasar Hoffman (page 5).

Caspar Yeakel, son of David Yeakel (page 9), arrived in Pennsylvania in 1734 with his father and brothers. Married and left one daughter, Susanna.

C. Yeakel died some time previous to 1784. In a letter written by Jacob Yeakel (page 61) in 1784, to a cousin, he mentions this Caspar as his uncle, and brother of his father Christopher.

Eve Meschter (page 16) came to Pennsylvania. Her husband was Melchior Meschter, and died in Germany, previous to her emigration to this country with her children.

It appears that Abraham Beyer (page 17) had a son George, who died September 19, 1744, and a daughter, who was the youngest child, named Susanna. MSS. in possession of Reuben Schultz, of Upper Hanover.

Rosina Beyer, wife of Abraham Beyer (page 17), was a sister of Anna Wagner (page 17), and Maria, wife of Christopher Heebner, Sr. (page 18).

Christopher Kriebel, recorded on page 32, was a minister of the Society of Schwenkfelders, and lived in Lower Salford Township, Montgomery County, Pa. George Kriebel, on page 22, was his brother.

The following list contains all the ministers of the Society of Schwenkfelders since the arrival in Pennsylvania:

George Weiss, Balthasar Hoffman, Christopher Schultz, Sr., Christopher Kriebel, George Kriebel, Christopher Hoffman, Melchior Kriebel, Melchior Schultz, Andrew Kriebel, Andrew Yeakel, John Schultz, Christopher Schultz, Jr., Balthasar Heebner, David Kriebel, Daniel Kriebel, Joshua Schultz, William Schultz, George Meschter, Reuben Kriebel, Abraham Heebner, Jacob Meschter, William S. Anders, and John B. Kriebel.

ERRATA.

IN George Kriebel's record, on page 22, in the third line, it should read page 10, instead of page 5.

IN Melchior Schultz's record, on page 22, in the third line, it should read Eve Meschter, page 16, instead of Melchior Meschter, page 9.

IN the record of Rev. Christopher Schultz, in the third line from the beginning, it should read page 10, instead of page 5.

IN the record of Edward Dowers, on page 80, it is stated that he was born in 1796, it should be 1769.

IN the record of Rev. Joshua Schultz, page 172, in the second line, it should read page 108, instead of page 102.

IN Charles Meschter's record, on page 290, in the first line, it should read Jacob Meschter, page 129, instead of Rev. Jacob Meschter, page 202.

1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a general discussion of the problem of the existence of solutions of the system of equations (1) and (2) under the assumption that the functions f_i and g_i are continuous and satisfy certain conditions. It is shown that under these conditions the system has a unique solution in the class of continuous functions.

2. In the second part of the paper, the problem of the existence of solutions of the system of equations (1) and (2) is considered under the assumption that the functions f_i and g_i are continuous and satisfy certain conditions. It is shown that under these conditions the system has a unique solution in the class of continuous functions.

1. The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that proper record-keeping is essential for the transparency and accountability of the organization. The text outlines the various methods used to collect and analyze data, ensuring that all information is up-to-date and reliable.

2. The second part of the document focuses on the implementation of the proposed changes. It details the steps involved in the transition process, from the initial planning phase to the final execution. The text also addresses the potential challenges that may arise during the implementation and provides strategies to overcome them. The document concludes with a summary of the key findings and a call to action for all stakeholders to support the changes.

The first of the year was a very dry one
and the crops were very poor. The winter was also very dry and the crops
were very poor.

The second of the year was a very wet one
and the crops were very good. The winter was also very wet and the crops
were very good.
